Menagerie Came From Calcutta to London and Was There Transshipped to America by Marquette.

New York, April 9.—Amid the trumpet-ing of elephants, the growl of tigers, the chattering of monkeys and the hiss of reptiles, the steamship Marquette, of the Atlantic Transport Line, arrived along-side her North River pier.

side her North River pier.

To receive these hostages from the jungle there waited upon the pier a representative of Forepaugh & Sells, to whom most of the animals were consigned, and an emissary from a Greenwich street animal dealer, to whom the rest were shipped. The menageric came from Calcutta to London, and was there transshipped to New York by the Marquette.

The keepers who were in charge of the collection had many exciting tales to tell. The Marquette's crew were weary and ashast. One yarn describes a savage battle between a crocodile and a python-of how the saurian had escaped from its cage on Monday right, and of how the first anyone knew of it was when one of the keepers heard the furious stapping of its tail upon the deck.

He rushed to the scene to find the one to find that that rope would not stay coiled down. Suddenly there was a yell from the forcastle. followed by cries from all parts of the ship.

The snake keeper was tumbled out of his berth and was vastly agitated to discover that thirty-two of his charges had gone a-gliding. He as hurriedly awakened his assistant, and then the mearch for those sixty-four reptiles began in earnest, but it was a full two days before the 128 had been recaptured. And even then 256 were left coiled about the tail shaft, where it was impossible to get at them.

Was just twelve months old to a day. He is the son and the only and first one of Sam Bernard.

In the second act, when Mr. Bernard was sputtering bad English to the man behind the desk at the Seaside Hotel, that individual handed Mr. Bernard over his own baby. It is only fair to presume that Mr. Bernard recognized the offspring. All bables look alike to many men. Anyway, Mr. Bernard took the haby with a smile.

Evidently he was used to it, for he kept it right side up. There were two watchful eyes in a stage box during this event, and they belonged to Mrs. Bernard. Perhaps that accounted for the smiling way in which Mr. Bernard received the new member of the cast. The baby appeared to recognize a good friend in rich Mr. Hoggenheimer of Park Lane.

His father brought young "Dick" Bernard down to the footlights, and, in a stage whisper asked the musical director, Morris Levy. If he could play any midnight music to fit Dick's voice.

"There is no orchestration for a howl," replied Mr. Levy.

Then Mr. Bernard ran, with the baby, up a flight of steps and disappeared. Everybody feared but hoped he wouldn't fail. He didn't.

After the matinee Richard Bernard gave a dinner to the company. The menu consisted of milk, and the host was the only one who felt hungry. He did full justice to the repast.

one who lett hungry. He there is under the to the repast.

Despite the fact that he is under the actors' age limit and no ligense had been taken out there was no interference by the Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Children.

When asked about his stage debut Richard Bernard had not a word to say.
